The Forest of Bowland AONB

The Forest of Bowland Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONB) is a nationally protected landscape and is internationally recognised for its special habitats and wildlife. The AONB is managed by a partnership of landowners, farmers, voluntary organisations, wildlife groups, recreation groups, local councils and government agencies, who work to protect, conserve and enhance the natural and cultural heritage of this special area.

Much of the Access Land in the Forest of Bowland AONB is within a Special Protection Area (SPA). This European designation recognises the importance of the area's upland heather moorland and blanket bog as habitat for upland birds. Bowland's moors are home to many threatened species, including merlin, golden plover, curlew, ring ouzel and the rare hen harrier, symbol of the AONB.

Many people depend on the Access Land for their livelihoods, including upland farming and game management. These rural industries have shaped the landscape we see today and play an important role in the conservation of the AONB.

In Britain we have 75% of the world's upland heather moorland and 15% of the global resource of blanket bog. Accidental fires and erosion through trampling can easily damage these habitats irreversibly. Extra care must be taken during dry weather and on wet, boggy areas. You can help by keeping to tracks and waymarked routes wherever possible.

FOREST OF BOWLAND

Area of Outstanding Natural Beauty

The birds

Hen harrier

Probably the most important bird species to regularly breed in the Forest of Bowland, this bird of prey is most often seen flying slowly over the ground, as it hunts for small birds and mammals. Males are pale grey in colour with black wing tips, whilst the female is mainly brown with a distinctive white rump.

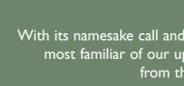

Merlin

Our smallest bird of prey, and not much bigger than a mistle thrush, the merlin is an open country specialist, where it hunts small birds in a fast, often twisting, flight. Males are a bluish colour above with a pale chest and belly, often tinged with pink, whilst the female is brown in colour.

Peregrine falcon

Our largest breeding falcon, and fastest bird, is most likely to be seen circling high above, as it watches for prey to appear. With pointed wing tips and short tail it creates a characteristic silhouette.

Curlew

With its namesake call and long curving beak, the curlew is one of the most familiar of our upland birds. From early April it can be found from the highest tops down to the valley bottoms.

Golden plover

In its spangled black and gold breeding plumage, this shy wading bird is more often heard than seen - a plaintive whistle often the only sign of its presence. A relatively rare bird in the Forest of Bowland, this moorland specialist is most common on the northern fells.

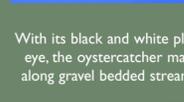

Red grouse

One of the few bird species to be found all year round on the fells, the red grouse is a popular game bird, with much of the moorland management targeted at benefiting this species. Most easily recognised by its "go back, go back" alarm call.

Short-eared owl

One of the few owl species that can be seen during daylight hours, the short-eared owl is a specialist hunter of voles, with numbers fluctuating dramatically from year to year in relation to vole numbers.

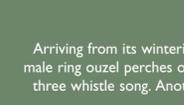

Oystercatcher

With its black and white plumage, orange beak and legs, and blood red eye, the oystercatcher makes a striking picture. Its favourite habitat is along gravel bedded streams, but it can also be found feeding in fields.

Snipe

A highly secretive bird, the snipe is most often seen when it is flushed from tall, wet vegetation, zig-zagging away into the distance. However, it can be seen and heard in the early morning as it displays over its territory, "drumming" with its tail feathers and diving towards the ground.

Ring ouzel

Arriving from its wintering ground in north Africa in late March, the male ring ouzel perches on top of a tree or rock and gives his simple three whistle song. Another rare bird in the Forest of Bowland, it is most common around the southern fells.

Birding locations to visit...

- A - Roeburndale Woods in the north of Bowland offer good opportunities for seeing oak woodland specialities such as redstart and pied flycatcher.
- B - The circular walk around Stocks Reservoir to the northeast offers a range of woodland and upland birds. The reservoir itself attracts wildfowl and waders and many passage migrants including the occasional osprey.
- C - Abbeystead in the west is one of the best areas for breeding waders on the upland pastures. Lapwing, curlew, redshank, snipe and oystercatcher are all numerous here and golden plover flocks can often be seen.
- D - Pendle Hill in the southeast is the place to see migrant dotterel in early May. The open stony ground by the trig point on the eastern summit is the best place to look for these delightful waders on their way to nest in the mountains of Scotland.
- E - In the southwest, Barnacre Reservoir (which is not open to the public) is an important staging post for hundreds of migrant whimbrel. The public footpaths on the south side offer opportunities for seeing these birds as they fly in to roost in late April and early May evenings giving their loud piping calls.

Disturbance is a major problem for ground-nesting birds

The breeding season, between 1st March and 31st July, is a particularly vulnerable time for ground-nesting birds. Disturbed birds may be prevented from setting, or if already nesting they will fly away from their nests, neglecting their eggs or chicks. Disturbance may result in:

- birds failing to nest
- eggs failing to hatch
- chicks dying from cold or lack of food
- nests becoming vulnerable to predators

It is a criminal offence to disturb rare breeding birds, including hen harriers, peregrines and merlins, intentionally or not. Fines of up to £20,000 and imprisonment are possible.

Nesting areas are being monitored by Natural England, RSPB and Lancashire Countryside Service.

How to recognise a distressed or disturbed bird

- They will make a loud repeated alarm call - they don't sound very happy and they're not.
- They will approach people much closer than would normally be the case - some birds may even dive bomb you. This is a clear message that the bird feels threatened by your presence and that you should retreat.
- They will feign injury in an attempt to distract you from the nest.
- Subtle behaviour such as circling high above.

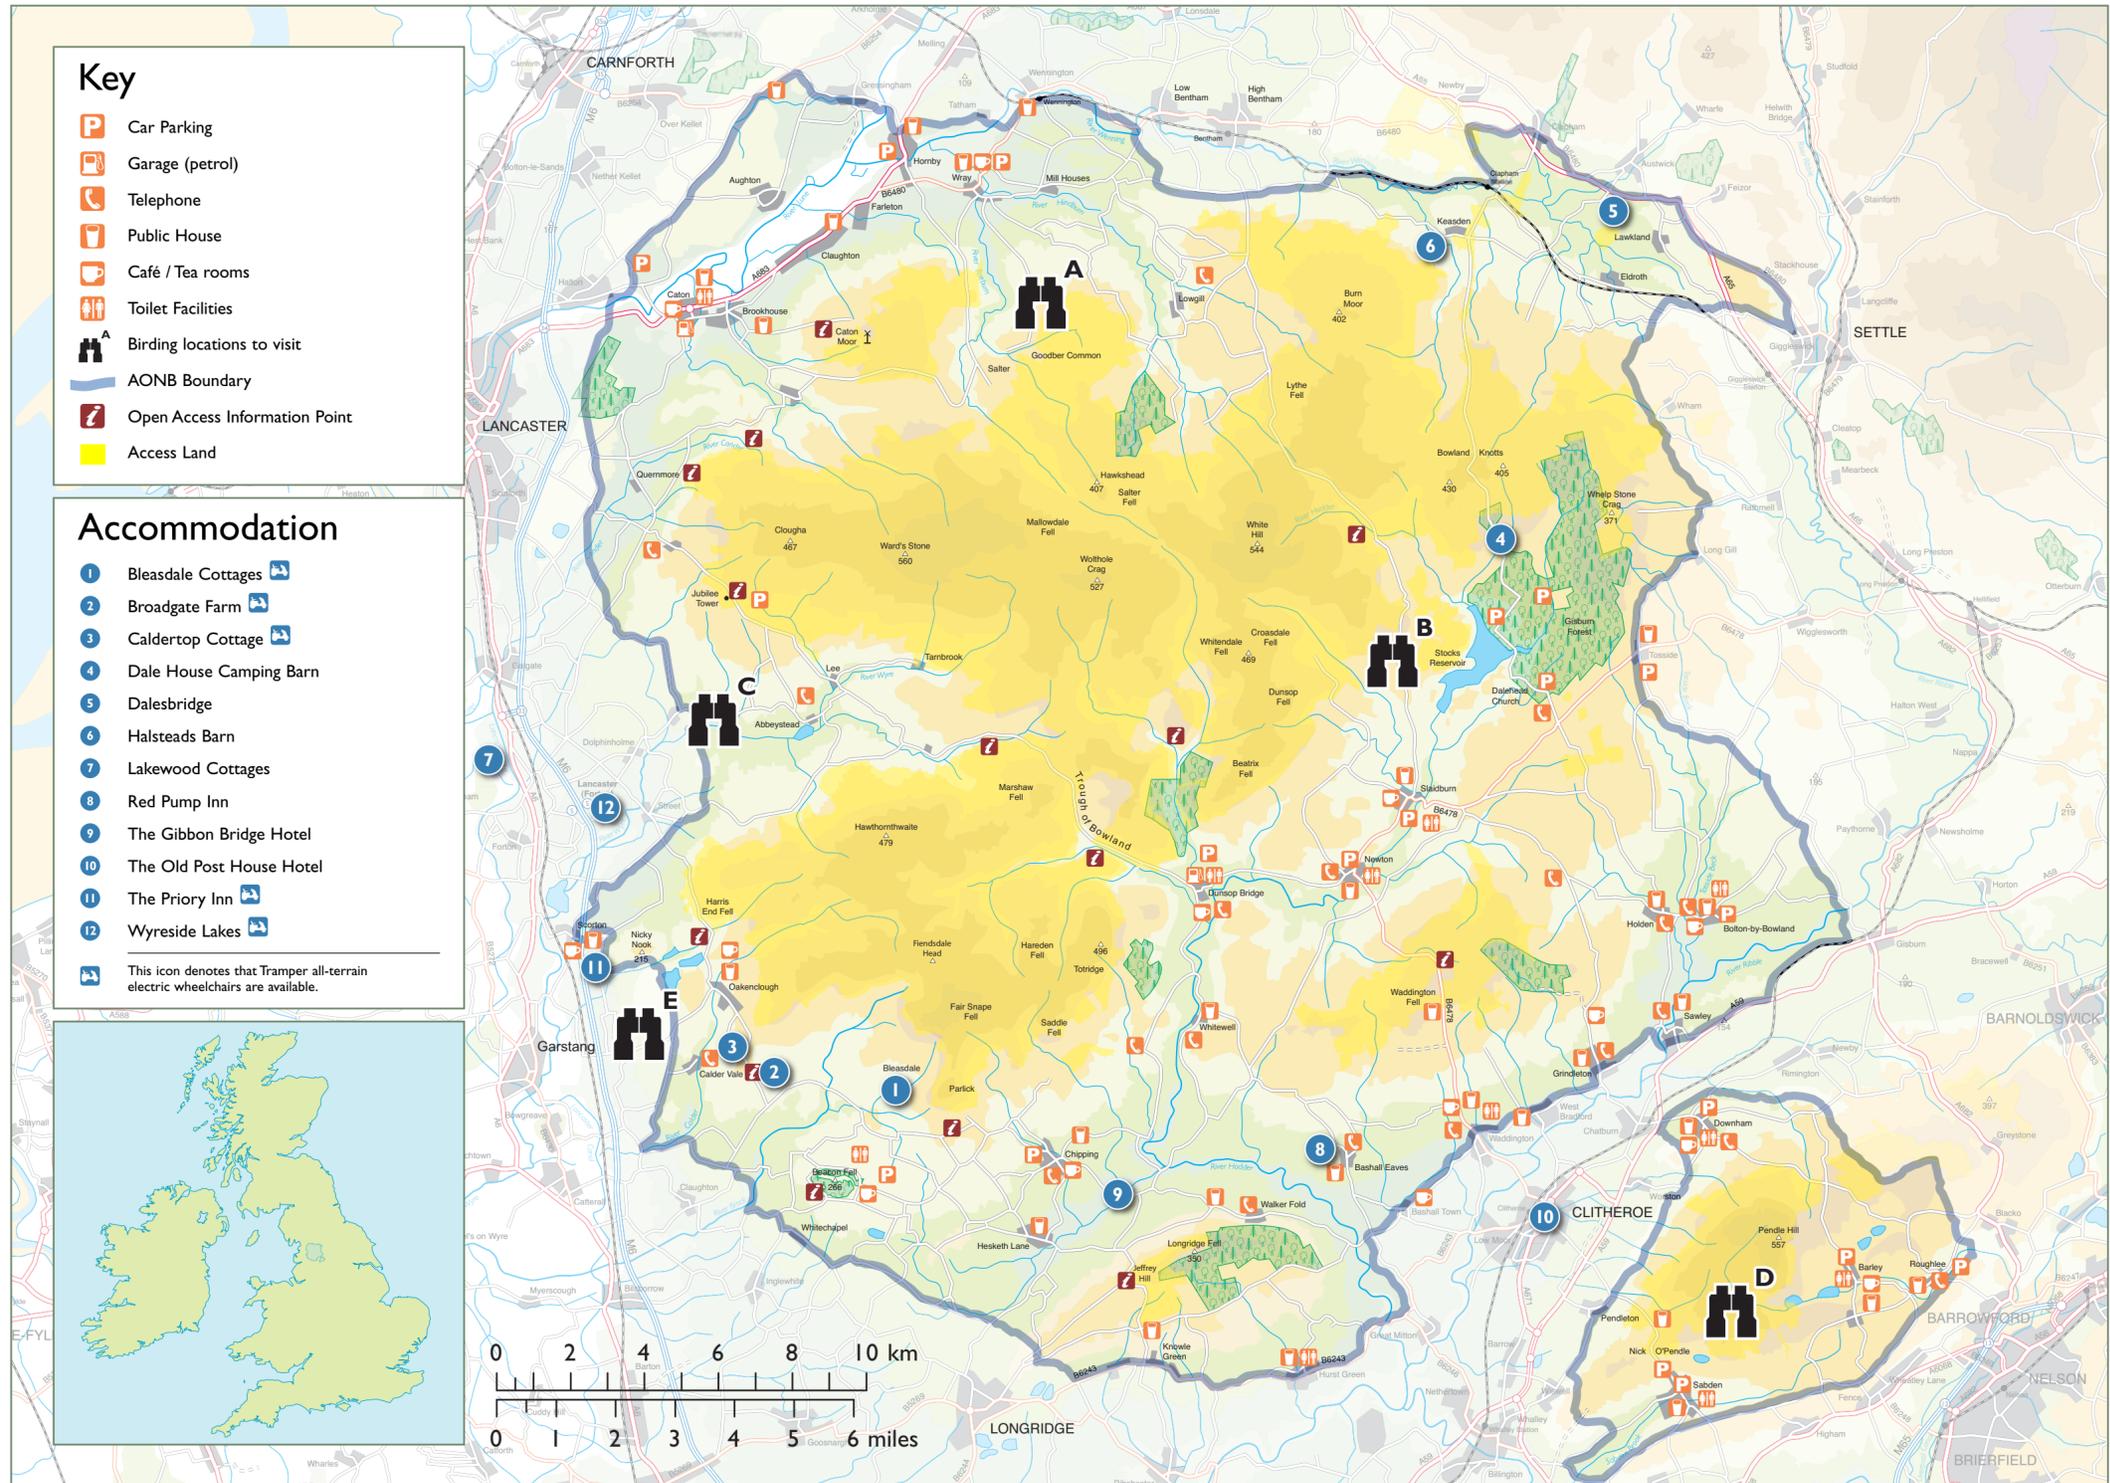

What you can do to help

- Wherever possible stick to tracks or paths, particularly when going through dense heather.
- Keep dogs and birds apart. Birds see dogs as a threat.
- Give a wide berth to young birds and to adults that appear distressed. Move away quickly and quietly - this may mean going back the way you have come.
- Do not stop for prolonged periods away from paths. Move on if a bird shows signs of disturbance or distress.
- Avoid steep narrow valleys (known as "cloughs").

- As part of monitoring work by Natural England and RSPB many hen harriers are tagged. You can help by reporting sightings and tag codes to RSPB Bowland Officer on 01200 446425 or Natural England on 07973 911594.
- Follow the Birdwatchers Code of Conduct - visit www.rspb.org.uk for further details.
- Follow any instructions or advice given by rangers or wardens.

The Moorland Visitor's Code

- Be safe - plan ahead and follow any signs
- Leave gates and property as you find them
- Prevent uncontrolled moorland fires
- Protect plants and animals, and take your litter home
- Keep dogs under close control
- Consider other people
